
Slider - Sliding in from edge of browser

Posted by philiplocke - 2011/04/21 08:13

Hi All

I am using the mod_arieasyslider slider module.

I want to crete a gap (say 1000px) between the article slides, so that the next one can't be seen, but slides in from the edge of the browser window. I have a div 100% of the browser window.

For example:

I want it to look like the article has slid in from the edge of the browser.

When you click for the next slide, it slides off to the left of the browser window and the next one slides in from the right edge side of the browser window.

Does that make sense?

Help, advice or guidance would be really appreciated.

Thanks

Just to give you an idea, I have attached an image.

The red arrows show that I want to slide the new article in (and its seen) from the right hand side of the browser window - as the present one is sliding off to the left of the browser window.

Hope this explains...

Also just found a problem where it won't slide in Chrome or Safari browsers - IE & FF are fine.

Hello,

About problem with WebKit based browsers (Safari and Chrome), this is the problem with custom browser's styles. Download and upgrade "ARI Easy Slider" module that fix the problem or add the next CSS rule to site template CSS file:

```
UL.es-items-container
{
  -webkit-margin-end: auto !important;
}
```

About your first question, the module can't work in described way. It requires modification of the module.

OK... so what would you charge to make the module do this???

Really urgent for clients site.

Thanks
