Hello,

{`$ResultsLink`} predefined variable contains frontend link to quiz results which can be used only by quiz taker.

We can add a new predefined variable which will contain backend link which can be used by administrators. Is it suitable for your needs?

Upgrade the extension to v. 3.3.3. It supports ability to use {`$AdminResultsLink`} predefined variables in mail templates.

PS: Let us know if it works fine for you.

Okay, I'm also having problems with the resultslink and have not found a solution to the problem in the forum. My link is embedded into the email like it is supposed to be but when you click it, a IE window begins to open then closes. After that another small error window shows up with a message "Internet Explorer Could Not Download" "Unspecified Error". Any suggestions?

It can be a problem with 3rd party extension or configuration of web server. Could you check web server error log, it can contain real PHP error (500 error page is shown to users, but it doesn't contain a real error due to security reasons).

PS: We can also investigate the problem in more details if you provide a temporary access to your J! backend by email.

Try now please.

PS: One note, only quiz takers have access to their results on frontend. If a guest user passed a quiz, a registered user can't results of guest user.
