Hello,

Use domain which you use in LAN for accessing your web site. For example if you use "localhost", generate license key for "localhost". BTW, you can open license page on the component backend and find necessary domain name in "Domain" textbox.

OK, this is the scenario,

I am actualy working on a local version of the web site (localhost) and it will be published on a remote server (military LAN) in about one month.
Should I create a localhost key and then create a new key when it will be pubblished?
What do I need a key if I bought the software and I need it to work?
Shouldn't be more easy?

Currently the component under domain-based license, it means that it requires license key for each new domain, this limitation will be removed within 1.5 - 2 months when we release the component under GNU GPL license. We can provide prolonged testing license key for your local machine and when your site will be ready you can generate production license key in "Member Area" on our site. Sorry for inconvenience.

OK, can you please send me a local product key in order to go head with the set up of the web site?
Since the LAN that hosts my web site is disconnected from public internet the product key that I will create when it will be published will create any problem?
